Second Term English Exam

Duration :02h00

Hard work is not the only thing that makes children lives difficult; their families are poor so they have no shelter and no sources. Because they have no education, they are condemned to be poor all their lives.

The British charity “Save the Children” says that it is important to talk child labourers to find solutions. Not all work is bad or dangerous. In some cases, if children can't work, they or their families can't survive. Boycotts of products made using child labour result in the children being forced to do a work that is more dangerous. Save the Children supports projects that give young workers access to education and better working conditions.

For example, in the Democratic Republic of Congo, teenagers from poor families receive some money to start businesses. They can buy products to sell at the market and make some money. Because they are the bosses, they can choose when to work and they have money to pay for school.

Embroiders like Nancy can go to class organized by “Save the Children”. The charity also helps them get reasonable pay for their work. Nancy says: “Now, we know our products sell very well in Europe. Before, I didn't know how much money I received. It was written down. I couldn't read it. I thought it was a good idea to ban products made by children. However, I live in the practical world, and I am very concerned about my family.
