A court in Germany has ruled that the video-sharing site "YouTube" is responsible for videos on its site that are posted illegally. The ruling said "YouTube" must do more to prevent posters uploading copyrighted music videos to the site. The case was brought to the courts by the royalty-collecting organization Gema, which represents over 64,000 German musicians and songwriters. Gema has been fighting YouTube in the courts since 2010. The group accuses "YouTube" of using music online without paying royalties to those who produced the tunes. "YouTube" may be forced to pay royalties for all the video clips on its site. This could prove extremely costly for Google, the owner of "YouTube."

The court said it did not consider "YouTube" to be the copyright violator, but the user who uploaded the songs. It said, however, that YouTube must implement stronger filters to block copyrighted material. YouTube representatives say the site is not responsible for what users post to it. They claim those who post copyrighted materials are at fault and that the YouTube site is simply a platform for sharing. A spokesman said, «We remain committed to finding a solution to the music licensing issue in Germany that will benefit artists, composers, authors, publishers and record labels, as well as the wider YouTube community." Currently, around 60 hours of videos are uploaded to the "YouTube" site every minute.
