Embezzling is the act of taking money that has been placed in your trust but belongs to another person. For instance, someone who works in a bank may secretly steal money that he or she has been entrusted to look after. This money belongs to the bank's customers, and the employee's action can be considered embezzling.

One of the major methods used in embezzling is to falsify records and documents. A recent British case involved a bank manager embezzling 23 million GB pounds (GBP). The bank manager set up many false bank accounts and deposited millions from other bank accounts into them.

Another very successful method of falsifying records is the phantom employee. The manager may create a job role and documents for an employee who does not really exist. The phantom employee is then paid a salary.

Even charities are threatened by embezzlement. One of the most common methods used in this case is to redirect large amounts of money for administrative purposes. Sadly, many worthwhile charities have been shut down as a result of this type of embezzling.

Read the text carefully then do the activities.

Today, a major concern is food shortage and starvation in third world countries often plagued by natural disasters and poor farming techniques. According to D.r. Ernest Stuhlinger (Director of NASA Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville) "large areas of land could be utilized far better if efficient methods of watershed control, fertilizer use, weather forecasting, (---) crop survey and harvest planning are applied. The best tool for the improvement of all these functions is the artificial earth satellite that circles the globe at a high altitude. It can observe and measure a large variety of factors indicating the conditions of crops, soil, rainfall, etc. It can also radio this information to ground stations for appropriate use."

Indeed, more than fifty years of human activity in space have produced benefits that improve the quality of life on earth. The first satellites, designed to study the space environment, contributed critical knowledge for developing satellite telecommunications and advances in weather forecasting. It also made available the solar panels, implantable heart monitors, water purification systems and some improved computing systems. Yet the most important achievement is that partnership with other sectors but also governments for joint research and development. Actually, space exploration contributed to trust and diplomacy between nations.
